To my husband -- for his encouragement, understanding and continued support in our life partnership.

To my family -- natural and unnatural -- for coming to my rescue the many times that my objectives exceeded my physical limitations.

Thank you, Terres, Regon, Krag, Greg, and Erik.

To all those "candidates" who took the time to help check the accuracy of this report and found many of the goofs before we went to press.
A special thanks to each of you.

And to all of you who had a hand in the process.
Thank you.

In addition to the corrections shown above there remain discrepancies between what was reported by the giver and the receiver in 20 of what was originally more than 80 instances. Some of these represent contributions which were sent but never received. Upon verification of this fact, some contributors expressed an intent to re-issue these contribution checks. As of March 17 eleven of these had not been received by the legislators. Whether the contribution would then be accepted also remains in question. The cause for the other discrepancies remains unexplained, but probably results from purely mechanical errors in reporting.

I N T R O D U C T I O N

It costs money to run for election to public office. Without money a candidate cannot make his name or message familiar to the public. Without the necessary dollars a candidate will not be elected.

If many individual citizens will not give small contributions in sufficient quantity, a serious candidate must turn elsewhere for the funds needed to seek election. In the 1976 general election 1,584,590 votes were cast. Had each of those voters contributed only $1.43 to an election "general fund", the primary and general election for all legislative candidates could have been funded at the 1976 level of $2,265,276.

In actuality small individual contributions accounted for less than 17% of the total amount raised by legislative candidates in the 1976 election. Individual contributions of $50 or more accounted for 13% of the total. Business-related contributions made up 32.9% of the total while labor-related sources accounted for 8.2%. Money coming from the legislative caucus committees and political parties amounted to 11.5% with other interest groups sharing 3%. The candidate's own funds, outstanding loans, and previous campaign surpluses accounted for the remaining 11.5%.

Although no simple relationship can be drawn between campaign contributions and subsequent voting records, it does seem fair to say that all those contributions are not likely to stem from a purely disinterested concern for the success of the democratic process. So-called "special interest" groups do make their contributions with specific legislative objectives in mind -- which lends weight to public suspicion of "undue influence" being wielded by such groups.

However, we must also be aware of the responsibilities resting upon us members of the "general public." We are quick to criticize, but how well do we understand the work-load carried by those we elect? We demand high standards of conduct and performance from elected officials, but we are hostile towards all attempts to provide an adequate and just salary for the services we expect them to perform. We have created a system which simply begs for abuse and we perpetuate it by our shortsighted stinginess and lack of participation. As citizens we receive pretty much what we deserve.

SCOPE AND NATURE

This report summarizes the financial impact through campaign contributions and gifts upon the Forty-Fifth Legislature in the State of Washington by fifty-three of the largest contributors in the 1976 election. It represents a cross-check between the reports made by candidates and those made by contributing committees and lobbyists.

One of the criticisms I received on Volume I of Who Gave? Who Got? How Much? was that it made no mention of the amount raised by a legislator in his election campaign from small individual contributions. This is the hardest kind of money to raise and constitutes only 16.7% of the total $2,265,276.48 raised in the 1976 legislative elections. Therefore, in my study of the 1976 election an attempt was made to analyze the proportion of each candidate's total available funds by category. Although the study included a fairly detailed break-down of each candidate's funds (See page 19 for the worksheet format upon which my study was based.), this report shows only three major categories: 1) percentage of small individual contributions of less than $50 and the number of persons giving such contributions; 2) percentage of business-related contributions; and 3) percentage of labor-related contributions.

It is clear that there are no absolute criteria for classifying election contributions and that my system is only one of many arbitrary possibilities. However, I have tried to be consistent in applying the following criteria while processing the data:

1. "Small Individual Contributions" are limited to contributions of less than $50 from individuals whom I have been unable to identify with any vested interest group.
2. "Business-Related" contributions include those for which:
 - 1) the contributor was shown as a business or political committee representing business; or
 - 2) the person making the contribution was a member of the board of directors or an officer or major stockholder in a business, or a lobbyist representing business; or
 - 3) the address of an attorney, physician, or other professional was found to be a business address, on the assumption that the contribution was coming from the business rather than a personal checking account.
3. "Labor-Related" contributions include those recognizably from a union, employee organization, or a lobbyist for any such organization. It also includes personal non-reimbursed contributions from such lobbyists and other labor officials.

The period covered in this report is January 1, 1976, through the reports covering the 1976 election and wrap-up. Early 1977 contributions made by these contributing sources are also included.

Surpluses or deficits accrued during earlier campaigns are carried over on the worksheets as a separate line item. Deficits are handled like an outstanding loan and are thus reduced as paid. Surpluses are added in as part of the total contributions. While this is admittedly only one of several possible ways of handling this item, it seems to me to give a better picture of how an election is financed.

Descriptive summaries of the fifty-three contributing entities are located in the first section of the book and are placed in the same order as the contributors are listed in the charts. Figures shown are dollars unless otherwise noted.

The summaries on these contributors include the number of legislative candidates who received contributions from each contributing entity and the total dollar amounts given directly to those legislative candidates. It also includes the amounts given to the caucuses and other political committees that contribute to legislative candidates. A total for contributions to the races for governor and lieutenant governor is also shown, but is incomplete. My major study did not include these two races in depth. Consequently, contributions which are shown only by the losing candidates have not been tabulated. It does include all contributions reported by the winners and by the contributing political committees and voluntarily reported by some lobbyists. "Total Financial Impact", therefore, is the sum of all contributions to 1) legislative candidates, 2) caucuses and related major contributing political committees, and 3) most of the contributions given for the governorship and lieutenant governor. For each of the major contributing sources studied, the totals reflect all contributions from that source and all of its identifiable related components.

Small contributions of less than $10 each may be shown by a candidate as a lump sum on a contribution report providing records of these contributors are maintained. For the purpose of this report the sum of these "unidentified small contributions" has been arbitrarily computed to represent one individual for every $7.50 shown in this category. When the number of individuals giving small contributions is shown in the summary for each candidate, those entries which contain such a computation are preceded by an "@" sign, e.g., @130 rather than 130.

Following the summary charts which cover those elected to the Forty-Fifth Legislature are summaries for the winner and loser of fifteen selected races. The first six were the most expensive with one or both candidates raising more than $20,000. The next seven races shown those in which an incumbent was defeated in the general election. The last two represent races in which there was no incumbent in the general election and the seat was taken by the party opposite to that which previously occupied it.

The 2000 hours spent in the preparation of this report were insufficient to insure total accuracy. More hours would have eliminated some of these errors. Total accuracy remains unattainable, however, due to discrepancies between the reports made by contributors and recipients and the human factor in all of us. Some checks mailed were simply never received by the candidate for whom they were intended. Over-all accuracy is estimated as within 1%. My sincere apologies for those embarrassing errors which I am sure have been inadvertently included.

"This organization shall be non-profit, non-partisan and non-discriminatory, and shall be civic, political and education in its purpose and program and shall support candidates for the state legislature of the State of Washington who believe in fiscally responsible government in the State of Washington, and who believe that the continuation of the free enterprise system is in the best interests of all citizens."
 (Article I, Sec. 3 -- Bylaws)

"Somebody is going to operate the politics of our country. If those people who are devoted to our constitution and our way of life, to our system of free enterprise and to the preservation of the blessings of freedom are not involved in politics, somebody else will be. If businessmen shun politics, others who may not understand or agree with the businessman's view of government will be making the laws under which the business community will have to live."

BOEINGCIVIC PLEDGE PROGRAM

The primary purposes of the Civic Pledge Program will be to analyze information regarding political candidates and parties considered to be of interest collectively to Boeing employees, and to afford to those participating in the program, on a voluntary basis, to make contributions in support of political candidates or parties pursuant to a coordinated program. Such a program will permit the employees making pledges to participate, on a mutually informed and legal basis, in the election of qualified individuals to jobs at all levels of government. Further, it will provide an organized employee effort to offset or neutralize financial aid to candidates from special interest groups who are not considered to have the best interest of The Boeing Company employees among their foremost objectives.

Many Boeing employees have been contacted by individual candidates soliciting financial support. Others have indicated an interest in giving financial support to a particular candidate but have not actually been requested to do so. One of the objectives of the program will be to provide pledged members of the Boeing organization the opportunity, on a coordinated and voluntary basis, to be more effective in supporting political candidates who can favorably affect their respective interests. (Extraction from By-Laws)

R. W. Halbert, Jr. -- Treasurer & Civic Pledge Program Administrator

This summary includes contributions made through the Civic Pledge Program and those reported by Boeing Co. lobbyists, Forrest G. Coffey and Robert G. Johnston, and corporation contributions.

Olympia abuzz over 'Who Gave? Who Got? How much?'

OLYMPIA (AP) — An 82-page paperback book has become Olympia's best seller.

And it has nothing to do with a lawmaker's secretary who can't type.

Instead it deals with campaign financing and is entitled "Who Gave? Who Got? How Much?"

The subtitle is "Campaign Financing of the 45th Washington State Legislature, 1976.

Publication day was Tuesday.

The author is Jolene Unsoeld, self-appointed watch dog of the Public Disclosure Commission.

At $3 a copy, the books were being gobbled up by legislators, lobbyists and reporters as fast as Mrs. Unsoeld could hand them out.

The legislative halls looked "like year-book signing day at Olympia High School," quipped a youthful observer.

"Everybody's looking for their name and so am I," said one lobbyist.

Mrs. Unsoeld released the book despite threats of a lawsuit voiced by Sen. Jeannete Hayner, R-Walla Walla.

Mrs. Hayner has accused Mrs. Unsoeld of coming to inaccurate conclusions in her assessment of the senator's contributions and their sources.

A letter to Mrs. Unsoeld from W. L. Minnick, a law partner of Sen. Hayner's husband, said her conclusions about Mrs. Hayner's contributions could be libelous "and an action for which you could be sued."

Sen. Hayner received contributions of $18,362 in her race against Democrat Gary Strohmaier, Touchet, now state agriculture director.

Mrs. Unsoeld sent a questionnaire to all candidates asking that they check the accuracy of her figures taken from Public Disclosure Commission files.

Sen. Hayner's figures showed that 17.5 per cent of her contributions were in small amounts, Mrs. Unsoeld said, actually a higher than average amount from individuals.

Another 47.2 per cent, Mrs. Unsoeld said, were business-related.

Minnick's conclusion, he said, was that 91 per cent of the contributing sources were individuals and 9 per cent were corporations and associations.

Mrs. Unsoeld's book lists all candidates for legislative offices, how much they received and who contributed the money.

In her introduction, Mrs. Unsoeld said small individual contributions accounted for less than 17 per cent of the total amount raised by legislative candidates.

She said individual contributions of $50 or more accounted for 13 per cent of the total while business-related contributions made up 32.9 per cent of the total. Labor-related contributions accounted for 8.2 per cent.

Money from legislative caucus committees and political parties accounted for 11.5 per cent with other interest groups sharing 3 per cent.

Mrs. Unsoeld said candidates' own money, outstanding loans, and previous campaign surpluses accounted for 11.5 per cent.

The book shows that contributions to legislative candidates during 1976 totaled $2.265 million and that the candidates spent $2.068 million.
